

and tied it on there and they go. That's how they traveled..those two old womens. Just follow the people around. They ain't got no relatives, no nothing..just like today, anybody got no relatives, nobody care for them. I guess, and that's the way it happened. Those two old ladies were like that. The funniest part of it is how they just cried like, and when they went back to their tents they said, "We never did cry, we just holler like we was crying, but we didn't even have no tears in our eyes." That's the way it happened you know. That's the all of that story. Short story.

(That's your short story, huh?)

It's a short story.

STORY OF HOW COYOTE HELPED THE COMANCHE:

(You said you know coyote stories too. Could you tell me one of those?)

- Yeah. You know long time, they had a camp..whole bunch of them had a camp. Why in the night they heard a coyote holler..hollering out there and four times as loud as he could. So when one of the mans heard, he run to the chief and say, "The coyote holler out there four times. That means bad news. Either we all going to get killed or either there's going to be bath among us. And you better go out there with a piece of meat and feed it to that coyote and talk to him and tell him to stop hollering like that. So one man took a chunk of meat and took it out there to feed to that coyote, and that coyote run from him..instead of eating it, he run away from it. So they went all back to bed again and when they went back to bed, here it holler again and hollered and hollered. And he tells then bad news..the coyote..and the old people understand what the meaning of that coyote hollering out there in the field after they all go to bed. They say, "We got bad nes coming or either death coming to our tribe." They say that. And there's..after
