

OF THE WOMEN IN THE BUNCH:

(Do you know any other stories about coyotes?)

Let's see. There was two mens and two womens. They went off on the warpath..long time ago. They all had horses apiece and they went off on as far as they went just as far as they could. They come to Mexicans home. Their horses give out, but they walked. This man and his wife, and this other man and his wife. These mans were brothers. The husbands were brothers and they took out and left the Indians, and they went and said, "We just go as far as we can and we're going to bring back a lot of stuffs for the people, you know." Their folks. Horses, clothes. Said, "We're going to go just as far as we can." And they went. I don't know how long they went and they come to a place at big mountain and they get lot of pine trees. This man said, "We might just as well cut some of these pine trees down and make us a house, night time comes. So we won't be scared of those coyotes, like they been doing us. They just about to eat us up. There were gr at big black wolkes, and they after they go to bed, they just have t get under something..rocks or get under bushes and just lay there. These coyotes were really bad, they were just about to eat them up. They just come to there. They laying just trying to go to sleep, and they can't go to sleep on account of the wolves. They just growl at them and try to jump on them..kill them. They make an arbor like, you know, and they tie poles around it and they put all the cedars and they made a little place were t ey could sleep in night time. The men folks would go out in daytime..they were all on foot. They had run down their horses and didn't go no more so they started walking. As far as they could around the creeks and mountains they look for deers and sometimes they bring back a deer for them to eat. One night they heard a coyote out there. Heard it hollering out there, just a little ways from them and it just keep coming close to
