

She was white as a sheet. Her face was just white and her lips was just blue. She was just laying there. And she didn't even notice me come in. We knock and the door and I said, "Nobody here." And we just went in and there she was laying in the bed..and I wake her up and said, "Lily are you sleeping?" And she said, "Yeah." "What's the matter with you?" She said, "I'm dying--going to die tonight--that's what the doctor told me. They dismissed me from the hospital. I'm gonna die either tonight or tomorrow..just any day." That's what she said. And I told Joey, I said, "You go get your brothers." They live out there in the country with his dad--their dad. I said, "You get them--you go get them. I'll get her out of it--that's nothing. That cancer ain't nothing to me. I'll get her out of it." And he beat it down there to his brothers and they come in right after dark--they come in from their dad's place--they were living out there. And that night we soaked that deer hide--and we soaked it in the water till it could get soft and they put it on the drum. And right there in the middle of Indianahoma--she got a home right there in town and a lot live right across the street from us over there. A lot of white people living all around her house. So I said, "Lets have this peyote meeting for her tonight..drum all night. Let me fix her up. She be alright." And so that night we had a drumming right there in the middle of Indianahoma. And she was worse the next morning. I said, "This is to noisy. I don't like to doctor anybody in noisey places. Let's take her home." So we load her up and brought her down here--to our home. And that night we had another peyote meeting inside of the house and it was just pouring down rain and we had the meeting there for her. Took that peyote and said, "Our fathers way back there--our grandfathers took this medicine, and they said whenever anybody's sick like that, you just take this and chew it and then put it in your hands and let her swallow it..let her swallow it. Give her four at the start." And I done that. I prayed and
