

Mr. Polecat has seen many changes come to his country-- Whole Indian families have died out or gone away, farming as a way of life no longer exists, old schools and homes have passed on in the wake of development and abandonment, once good fishing streams are mostly polluted now, and white people have bought up great areas of the land for cattle raising. But he says he has about lived out his time and has had his joys and blessings along with the sorrows and regrets.