

here a couple of years ago I had-- it was a toll bridge. And I had, until a couple of years ago I had a couple of those tokens.

(Well.)

That they give when you cross the bridge, you know, and I gave one of 'em to--There was another old man that lived down there. He was Dougherty. You probably have heard of the Dougherty. Ed Dougherty, he lived down there for years and years. Of course he's gone now.

And Lizzie Dougherty's dad run that toll bridge for years and years.

And this Ed Dougherty's daughter 'course she don't live here. She lives in New Mexico, Farmington, New Mexico. She'd come up here and visit us. Her maiden name was Dougherty before she married Clyde. This girl come to visit and I gave her one of those tokens. She was just so glad to get it.

(Well, I know she would be 'cause that was--)

And then I lost the last one. I had one and somehow it got misplaced.

(Well, has this always been a timber country like it is now?)

Oh no, down in there was always farming country.

(Well, that's what I was say--)

Since that OOW took it over, and they can't do farming, it's just growed up. This right down here where these trees are just on down on the other side of that fence down there. My husband raised wheat in there.

(Well.)

Years and years ago.

(Now it's all growed up in timber.)

CONCERNING OTHER CEMETERIES

It's all growed up in timber. Yes, down in the forest area now. You can drive down through this old--now there's another cemetery I don't
