

and eat her up. He came back to his brother. Then he told his brother, "Your wife done me dirty, and I fed her to the wolves." His brother said, "Well, that's all right. You're my brother. Now you must help me look after my boys." He said, "All right. They're gonna be warriors when they grow up." So he trained them. He make them bows and arrows. He take them out and shoot at things. Then he told his brother, "I'm going to take the boys out. They are going to be good boys." White Man said, "Go ahead. When you come back, I won't be here. I'll be gone."

They started, the four boys and this man. The first night they heard somebody trying to scare them. They went on. The same thing happened the second night. Something tried to scare them. And then they went on again. They didn't pay no attention. The third night they went on to bed and they heard the same thing. Someone tried to scare them. They woke up and they didn't have no bows or arrows or moccasins or anything. It was their own father, White Man, that was trying to scare them and make them turn back. But they won't turn back. They went on. They came to a camp of some other people. Instead of fighting, these people greet them and collect clothes for them, moccasins. Some men give them arrows. One man told them there was the enemy pretty close. They went on and they met this man coming. He was a big man. He had horns on his head and had big things (like sticks or swords) in his hands. "Don't turn back," this man told them. "Stand back. I'm going to shoot him in the heart," one of them said. They shoot him, and hit him right in the heart. It was their father. They felt bad because it was their own father they killed, but it was his own fault. They bury him. Then they quit going on warpath. They quit everything. And that's the way this White Man worked. He wanted to be the highest man--higher than anybody. When they killed him, that was the end of him, and that's the end of the story.
