

are you going to need? In case of somebody having whooping cough, take the leaves off of a cane pole.

(Like sugar cane?)

Well, it's--

(Or that fishing cane pole?)

Yeah. Fishing cane pole. Just take the green leaves off of that and brew it.

(Where do you find this fishing cane pole?)

You find them along the river.

(Along the creek's bed?)

Bank. River.

(You take the leaves off of it?)

That's for whooping cough.

(Do you dry 'em or do you bring 'em on home and--?)

Well, bring 'em on home, I guess. Then just brew it and put that brew in a jar or a can or something like this to preserve it. Later on, use it.

(You put honey or anything in it?)

Well, you have to sweeten some. I imagine it would be pretty bitter by the time you brewed it. Might have to sweeten it for a little child, you know.

(Now is that good for whooping cough?)

For whooping cough alone. About the only thing I know. All right, there's another remedy. Another root--another seed come out.

Another one--you very seldom do this. But the Indian people have done it. It has been a successful way of treatment is get a white mare.

Horse mare. Now if it had a young colt, get the milk. Milk the mare and get the milk. Let your child take it, and he won't develop
