

Yeah.

(That's a big bunch too, isn't it?)

Yeah, sure is. Well, lets see, there's about, oh, about thirty.

(About thirty of 'em?)

Going not due North.

(Well)

I guess that's (not clear)

(Yeah, the old Indian man, he said, when you seen the wild geese go south, be cold weather coming right behind 'em.)

Looks like there's a stopping place for them over on the river.

(They just, they probably go on over on the river where that lot of water is. Yeah, there's lot of signs, I guess, the older Indian folks go by to tell about the weather. What kind of weather it will be. I don't remember what some of 'em are, but you tell something about the leaf. I don't remember what it is though.)

Oh, yeah, I heard about that too.

(What was that one?)

By the leaves like something. They go by shape of edge of the leaves, you know.

(Yeah)

Blizzard and things. They can tell by the leaves, you know. They used to tell by the shucks of corn. Nobody raises corn nowadays.

IN EARLY DAYS, PEOPLE GATHERED POSSUM GRAPES FOR HOME USE

(Well, nobody raises corn anymore. No, everything is changing now.

Were there any possum grapes this time?)

In the field, in that field there I saw some over there.
