

And the stuff he stole, he made a list of them show what he got and then left it on the counter to show them, telling them what they got. He was an honest Indian. Indians are awful nice people though, I'll tell you.

(Indians are fine folks.)

I -- I just like them. They got ways that I like.

(At one time was there a little school up there across the creek called Eureka?)

Yes.

(Well, Eureka.)

Yeah, Eureka. A bus come through here and picking them up children --

(not clear).

(Yeah, Eureka's school is gone and Pheasant Hill's gone now, no school.)

My boys raised a (words not clear) he wanted to be back in school.

(Yeah, and West Point's gone.)

West Point's gone, There's the graveyard, of course.

(That's all that's left there.)

That's all that's left.

(That was about the only schools up in there, wasn't there?)

Yeah, West Point was one of the older schools.

(Well, Dupree was way down south there.)

(Unintelligible.)

(I guess so.)

Duprees and -- Harlan, Marks, and Frost--

(Those Duprees were old settlers in here, too, weren't they?)

Yeah, they were Cherokee Indians, and Woolman and --

(That used to be a big farming country up in through there, at one time, I guess.)
