

man joined. He always do like the Arapahoes. This Kiowa man, they call him Little Joe. Somebody sneaked him some water about the third day, I guess, and come a big rain.

(Did they find out?)

Sure. Somebody gave him a drink of water. Yeah, he did it himself, because those Arapahoes, they don't drink water. Maybe a man--I saw him last time down north of Geary dancing--he was sick, they claim from that tuberculosis. And he was in there to try to save--cure his tuberculosis. He didn't drink for four days and four nights. He probably died, though. You know how this tuberculosis is--it eats your lungs out, I guess.

(I've heard of one organization the Arapahoes used to have--the Starhawk society. Have you ever heard anything about that?)

No. No, I don't. Only dance I've seen is the Sun Dance. War Dance. And Round dance, like they do here now.

(What kind of a step do they do in this Sun Dance?)

They just stand there and jump up and down. Like you dance Blackfeet. But they jump up and down--they stand there. They got whistles (demonstrates how they blow). See, those drummers setting these things on Sun Dance. They go by that tune, you know, in there.

(What kind of dress would they have on while they're doing this?)

They have buckskin. They don't have no shirt. They're all painted, all kind of marks on there. Some of them got moon on there, and star, and on back some kind of-- Well, that's the way they believe they gonna have to mark up theyself. They don't have no shirt. They just have them buckskin shirts, and moccasins --like lady moccasins. You seen them. They come up high--way up there. That's the kind they use when they dance the Sun Dance. They all dress alike.

(How would they have their hair fixed?)
