

mother. To me, she was a very wonderful person, like I said before. She financed my room and board, you might say, down in Marlin, Texas. And also, she got my brothers through school, and she not only did this, she's a very dedicated Christian. And many times, people would come to her, not many times, practically all the time. People would come to her asking for assistance. And she never turned them down. I don't know (word not clear) or what, but I don't care where they asked to her to take them. She'd always be there, and she'd always take them with no expense to them. And she just-- I can't say that I didn't have--I had such a wonderful grandmother, and I only wish she was living today so that I could repay her for all she's done for me. But, however, knowing that I did have a grandmother such as she, it just makes me feel real wonderful inside. And she's helped so many people. It's unbelievable how many she's helped to get back to Eufaula, to Chilocco, to Haskell, here and there. She has traveled so many miles getting children to get back to the places, and back home for Christmas, and this and that; and she'd never take a credit for it. And that's the way I am. If I do something for someone, I don't like to be praised for it all. It's just between me, and them and the Lord. And I don't want any praises for anything because I feel like if I was in that same situation and that person would also do the same for me. And I just--today, I feel if it hadn't been for her--course, I know the Lord had a Mighty Hand in all this, but this financial condition which I know He blessed her with and everything. If it hadn't been for her, I wouldn't be able to do what I can do today. It's marvelous, what I can do. I'm not bragging or anything. And yet, I can look around, and I can see others that are more handicapped than I am, and they can do wonders. It's just magnificent to see. And there's some that has problems, and you can talk to them. And like, I've had a great opportunity to go to school. I never thought I would. I really never anticipated that I would
