

road that we once went over long time ago. As far as the food is concerned, I enjoy those very much. And I like softkey and abuska and all these foods they have. I'm for all that. I love it very much, very delicious. And I do go out very much for all this. I don't down those or any of them. If they're fine, I love to eat them. And I feel like, as far as the food line is concerned, I feel like they should go on and continue and all this because it is within itself something that should be kept. And things are fading away so fast. But the food, I do--I did appreciate very much. I know during my childhood, there was a lot of things that mother used to tell. But she couldn't tell things that other people had told, like their father had told. Like I said before, her father was deceased before she even was born. And so therefore, she missed out on life as far as fatherhood was concerned. And dad doesn't recall everything that was said and done. And I'm sure at the time that they were growing up, all this was their life. I know it was her life, and they had a very close relationship I feel then than they do today. I mean, because I know. I can tell that families today aren't as close as they used to be long time ago. And I wish there was a solution that I could find to all this. But it seems to be hard to find a solution. I tried so hard to see if there was a way, but I don't know. It just seems like--it's just the time that people are interested just for themselves anymore. And this is just gone down through history. And this is the way it says we'll be in the Bible. And so therefore, I just take it, this is the way it will be. And all in all even though all this has happened, I had intended to tape off a tape and later on write a autobiography of myself not that I was so important or anything like that, but later on in life, I thought maybe it might be a help to some handicap further on down the line. And I know Helen Keller had inspired me so much. But every time I get discouraged or anything, I think of her, and I think, "Well, she's gone through so much,
