

(Yes. That's some of Evan's folks, I think.)

Evan Brown?

Uh-huh. Evan has talked about some of these people he know. I just assumed--)

Well, used to, they--I don't think a Brown--they lived at Delaware.

Them kids grew up at Delaware. There was a--what's his name I seen here? Ed Brown, See, there was Clarence Brown, Dick Brown. Dick lives at Falls. His widow still lives up there. And Hunts Brown.

Their mother was a--was related to Uncle Steve Bluejacket family.

And Calvin Everett, Ed Brown and Tracy Brown, Roxie Brown and Lola

Beard. And then infant Crockett.

(Newcomb must have been one of the very few that was on the (not clear) side.)

He was, he was my husband's half-brother. Sure. Now there's those other Newcombs but then when they died their children buried them in the Nowata cemetery. And when we lost daddy, we buried him in the Nowata cemetery. Because so much of the time they don't take care of the cemetery.

(That's right.)

And so when he passed away and when his brother passed away, Andy Wilson.

They buried him at Nowata too. And because they do take such good care of the Nowata cemetery.

(Yes).

So, I did the same when we lost my husband. We went down to make the funeral arrangements and I talked to 'em about a lot. That lot at Nowata. My oldest son said, "Well, mother I was wanting to say something, but I didn't know whether to or not." But he said, "I'm so
