

and they've got a pretty nice church there, too.

(I--I've often wondered how people got by in those early days when they didn't have any church building or facility around. I guess they meet wherever they could.)

Well I think so, just meet out there, have prayer meeting at some people's house, you know. And since, they'll the regular prayer meeting here, and before revival, you know, would have these different homes, you finally get the people interested. But seemed like the people get farther away than they--

(They seem to, they sure do, that's one of the pitiful things of this day and age.)

It sure is.

LITTLE COUNTRY STORES HAVE DISAPPEARED

(Were there any little country stores scattered around before they finally disappeared, you know, some communities--)

Well, no Watova up here, you know, they's--you know where Watova is? They had a store or two, up there at one time, I don't believe there was a country store around here, I can't recall if there was any anywhere.

One time down at Sunny Side, since we been here, oh, the last forty years, Dave McClure had a little old filling station there for a year or two, and sold stuff, but you wouldn't call it any country store, I don't think.

(The starting with the early days coming up to date, the cemeteries for this Talala community would be the--of course, Nicholson has been moved, and, let see, there's the Bible, and then Talala, that was the only three then for this area, I guess.)

CEMETERIES

Well let me see there's--well there's a colored, nigger, cemetery back
