

(Well, now Sam, your son, was he the one that helped write that Cherokee prayer book that organization put out?)

Uh-huh. Yes, he's the one.

(So he speaks and writes English and Cherokee?)

Uh-huh. Yeah, writes Cherokee and English both. And he's the last of the little preacher now.

(Oh, is he?)

Uh-huh, he's last of the little preacher now. And I am sure glad of it.

(Well, that's good.)

Yeah, it sure is. I sure thank the Lord for them. I raise my children taking them to church. I guess that's the good I done for them. I took them there.

(Well, what church is that you all go to?)

Uh-Swimmer Church house. The First Baptist Church.

(First Baptist?)

Uh-huh. Out there at Swimmer.

(Now they have services in Cherokee and English?)

Uh-hum. Yeah, they do. Yeah, they have Cherokee and English both.

(Well, has he, has Sam your son--has he reached a point now where he can preach sermons when he wants to or?)

Yeah, he does pretty good when he preaches. He's doing good. He's practicing, learning, and studying his Bibles all the time. Everything's going all right.

(Well, you must be real proud of him.)

Yes, I am. I sure am very proud of him. And my other boy--he's living in Tulsa. He's not married. He's working up there. Minnie, she's at Muskogee. She lives in Muskogee. And Alma, I guess she'll
