

and pecking at the windows now.

(Do they make noise in church or run up and down the aisles?)

Well, they would now. But in them days they didn't. Everything was quiet. They run around up in the yard playing at the church house having church. They'd go out there and make them kids hush hollering or quit playing or hollering out there. Or they'd make them quiet. Some of the big ones would go out there and--but now there in these days, if they was to go out there and stop the kids, well, the parents would get mad now. If they wanted to stop them, they'd get mad about the kids now. In them days, they didn't.

(It'd hurt their feelings, wouldn't it?)

Yeah. It hurt their feelings now. But in them days they didn't.

And they was glad if someone make them stop so they'd mind the others quicker than they would the parents. That's one reason. Cause my boy, kept him under my side all the time--long as I stayed in church, till church was over. I never let them go outside and play. So you can see where, not just physical changes about the community change, but peoples' attitudes are changing the way they act toward one another. Yeah, that's what it is. That's what changing now. No and a long time ago, back them days--them was the good old days as they call it. And it was. And it was the good old days at that time.

(And actually you had less back then than people have now?)

Yes, that's right. That's right.

(But they shared it more.)

Yeah, they shared it more. And they worked for all of their stuff then. And they raised it. Some of those fellows, they raised all of that stuff what they had to eat and everything else. They raise
