

(Shermann.)

No.

Woman: Shaw. Roy Shaw.

Shaw.

(Yeah, yeah. And he was telling me also that about a little cemetery back in there.)

Yeah.

(I went back with his wife and found it. And I was kinda interested in knowing which faction of the Landrums that got over in there.)

Which what?

(The Landrums.)

Landrums.

(Yeah.)

That was Mouse Landrum's--Mouse Landrum's family was buried there.

Mouse Landrum was the first person that I ever remember seeing 'em bury.

(Well.)

My dad came back to, I guess, to see the grave and so they turned out school for the funeral. I can see that man yet.

(Well.)

He's got one daughter that lives here in town. But she didn't go to school there.

(Yeah. And then, let's see the other markers that I remembered there were of the Cornsilk family.)

Yeah, Cornsilks.

(And they lived, I guess, in that area too.)

Yeah, they lived back there, back south there, there's a trailer house and another house there now. They lived back there. I know this old lady Cornsilk. I hear her telling my mother that they had a Chestnut tree. Said, it never had chestnuts on it.
