

(Well. Yeah. I know where that corner is.)

The house when I lived--the house that set there when I went to school there--better than half a mile east there just a little north was this neighbor woman lived back in the field be northeast of where this house is.

(Yeah.)

(sentence not clear) Her folks is all dead. And she had--my father saved a dollar a month for me and my sister.

(Well, a dollar a month.)

Or two dollars a month, a dollar a piece. And when we went to school, I don't know just how long, but it got cold and she came up there and told my dad that school was out. That nobody come one day. School was out.

(Just too cold. Well. The Duncan family, I supposed that the church was named after some of the Duncans or the Duncan family.)

Yeah there was a Duncan buried at that graveyard, but they've taken his--moved him to Vinita. I know he was dead--oh Aunt Lucy they called her, I believe, called her aunt. Always called her granny, I can't remember. But Lizzie Davis at Oklahoma City is the only one of that family. No there's one at Brownsville, Texas. But seems to me like somebody told me that one at Brownsville, Texas was dead. But I never heard of this other, this Lizzie, being dead. I reckon she went by the name of Davis. She's married two or three times.

(Is it true that that little cemetery was called the Buzzard Cemetery or Sixkiller Cemetery?)

No, it was the Sixkiller Cemetery back up this way and then out in--

(Yeah)
