

I guess it was in the year of 1903. No, it was in the spring of 1906 when it was. There was a lady from Missouri. I forgot her name. Taught at Cleora. They moved the schoolhouse up from under the hill down there up there. My dad helped move it. I went to Duncan Chapel that year. Then the next summer my dad helped move the schoolhouse up on the hill. And we went to school there. And this lady was from Missouri. It came in April, this cyclone did. And she was staying down in there. Blew her house away where they was having a singin', and hurt a lot of people.

(well.)

But it just blowed the doctor's house down there in Cleora. He had his wife and boy. They had an old trunk. It was just a little two room house. And it had an old trunk over there. My dad took me down there after the storm. And there was four or five boards there. There was that old trunk setting up on there yet. And them people got between the wall of that trunk and didn't get a scratch. But about three-quarters of a mile from there, there was a bunch of people hurt, and some of 'em pretty bad, but nobody--everybody survived it. And there was about ten or twelve teams of horses, well I wouldn't know just how many. I didn't count 'em. I was just guessing. But they were all tied to a manger. They were having a singing there that day. And they was all tied to the manger. And I knowed my dad--we went down there. heard this one. There was quite a few people around there looking. Wasn't a horse hurt. But one horse--they all had harness on. And one of 'em had the hames off--one of his hames knocked off. And there was a wagon setting there. I've always wondered. I had to tell it. This
