

(Ross Thomas)

Ross Thomas. Now Mack's boy, my brother's boy down Tahlequah has got his discharge.

(Well.)

His discharge from the Civil War.

(Civil War. Well, what about that.)

You can probably get the record of that too.

(I would like to see that. That would be interesting to see.)

(Interruption) Contact his boy. His boy works for the G And C Truck Company right south of Tahlequah.

(Interruption)

(Yeah. He was a big boy)

And there was my mother and my aunt. It scared kids, you know, to see him. He used to hold conventions you know.

(Yeah.)

Said, now, you'd better be careful children, that old man out there he eats boys, little boys.

(Well. Old Tom Rider.)

Kids step down there.

(Well, I know they did.)

Yeah, yeah, they would tell them he would eat little boys.

(Yeah, now--didn't they originally come from down around that little community of Zeb?)

Rider?

(Rider.)

I DON't know.

(There's one bunch of 'em down in there.)

That's about all I remember about them. I remember seeing him.

(Yeah.)
