

Still there, we've been wanting to get it.

(Yeah, it would be nice if you could get that because that--now that would be an old piece of stone, that's been in use as part of a house.)

Yes sir. I go up there and look around every once in a while. 'Course now we wouldn't remember that place there. We was living there when my father got killed. Right over near Hulbert by Fourteen Mile Creek right over here. That old house place over here where he got killed, you know. We moved up on another lease about a quarter of a mile from there. And we lived there then till Dawes Commission, you know, then went back. Live in allotment of land and everything. So I could look over allotment and everything. We moved from there up on Blackbird in 1900. All of us reared up there, all of us kids..

(Yeah, that was one of the pretty parts of the country up there.)

These old timers, all going to be gone pretty soon.

(They're going fast, aren't they?)

Yeah.

(Interruption)

EARLY OUTLAWS

(You know this little article mentioned those Cook boys that were outlaws, rather on the mean side. I don't know whether they're outlaws or not. Now was there also some Crittendons that turned bad?)

Well, I just don't remember. Didn't that say anything about--

(No, it didn't mention the Crittendons. Seem like someone has told me about some--couple of Crittendon boys that went bad. But I do know that the Cook boys turned bad.)

Yeah. I don't know about them--