

Yes, Frank supposed to be awful good boy. They used to run a ferris wheel. And so, he fixed it, you know. And we girls could ride free when we go out with those boys. (laughter) Oh, we'd work to get on that swing. They played music, guitar. (laughter)

(You know, there's been so much happen here that it'll never all be written down, I know.)

No.

MORE CEMETERIES LOCATED - NAMES OF FAMILIES

(By the way, do you recall anything about the what they call the old Negro slave cemetery that's out east at edge of town?)

No, it was out this way.

(Was it?)

Uh-huh. You know where that little red barn is---

(Oh, yeah. I got my directions mixed.)

You go right down straight that away, and to the left. They had a (not clear) factory out there for ahile, but they done tore it up. But they tore the school house down. You know, there was a colorful character way back that might--I've heard the older people talk about that. At one time, I guess, when he was a small boy, he was a slave of Chief John Ross, and his name was Stick Ross.)

Yes, well, he lived upon a mountain there.

(He lived on the mountain.)

We call it old Stick Ross mountain.

(Yes, I--I never knew where it was, but I've heard about it.)

Uh-huh, well, it's southwest of town. (Sentence not clear)

(Well, you know, it's so interesting to hear about all the different families that lived in this country. There were the Riders, the Carlyle, and you just
