spectator or a something that just happened while he was enroute to some destination. He was always moving.

(Did he ever tell you about any of them?)

Yeah, one in particular about the Kiowas raiding a train or it wasn't exactly a train it was an army, oh what-you-callit, oh they had horses and mules and a.....

(A supply train?)

.....delivering supplies yeah. As well as delivering payrolls. I say some of these supplies that the Indians go for food so they raid them for food. And like I told you yesterday that some of these cowboys down there disguise themselves as Indians and raid these same trains only they took the money and not the food. That's why all these differences developed because I blame the white man for doing that. Playing trick on the Indians....getting the money and then letting the Indians take the blame. For at that time and years they didn't have no stores and they hd no place to spend money. So therefore, I say the white man did something they shouldn't have done steal from their own peoples then let somebody else take the blame. That's when we started these differences....discrimination or whatever you might call it. But for instance, if I stole something and give you the blame what would you calll me? Thats' the same thing, when white man give us the blame for the robbing of their own people. There good payroll moving from camp to camp and these "whiteman" dressed and painted like Indians done what Indians did for food. Instead of taking the food they took the money.

(How would the Indians go about attacking a train like that?)

Well, I'm not no general or I'm not no chief but I couldn't tell you that. Because, in the army they have a way to attack and some way in the Indian wars, they have a chief or leader, what they call or use a strategy. That I don't know because I never was in a war and I never did.

(What I was wondering, didn't your grandfather tell you how they did it at that time?)

Oh yeah, he told me but I couldn't go into details about it. All I know is that he would start a story right in the middle of an attack, the advancing, hollering, and see
