

much of Indian ways and customs preserved as can be. Well, in this part of the country, was there a place where they had a Civil War battle?)

Cooper: Yeah, the Battle of Honey Springs.

(Honey Springs, where was that located from here?)

Unidentified voice: South.

(South of here?)

Cooper: There was an old house down there that was torn down--torn down and moved it off. Where they moved it to, I don't know. I don't see how they do it.

(Did they bury the soldiers that were killed in that battle? Did they bury them out there?)

I don't know.

(I would think so.)

I know the grave yard is like if you buried somebody, like you could dig into a grave.

Unidentified voice: No, now, there's two cemeteries down there--Honey Spring on this side; and there is one on the old Indian graves place on that side, south of there. They got some old tombstones down in there.

(Well, there must have been a lot of Indians down in that part of the country at one time.)

Yes---

(End of Interview)