

lives over there he told me about 'it--these men getting it. Said, I found it. Said, I didn't know what to do with it after I found it. Said, I was crazy for not moving it. Said I left it there like a dunce. That old fellow, that's all he did was hide money. Told me about--go over with him on south branch. West side of Oilton and the north side of the Cimarron river. We went over there and great big flat rock just about the size of that blanket. It had markings on it. I stayed there. I believe there's a box down here someplace. Let's go down here and look. Should be some money buried under it. We went down there. Somebody had dug it out. Well, I just heard the Daltons had buried sixty-five thousand dollars. The only way you can get down in this canyon is go this bluff. Had a shelf or whatever like that. Hell, they'd go back in there with their horses and you could never see 'em. You could be a hundred feet of them and never see 'em. Well, they buried this money right out in front of it. When Ernest got out of the pen, he went up there. And I saw the hole where they got sixty-five thousand dollars. And he has a thousand dollar rug for anyone who could show a rock bluff with a six-shooter carved on it. If a man could ever find-- this old man, he was hunting for that six shooter. Well, I didn't know it. I didn't know anything about that country, but there was a salt creek run into the Cimarron from the south side. When they put in this Keystone lake up here and built that road up there by the highway up around there, went downtown and heard them talking one time. He said, you know, it's a funny thing up there. He said, I saw a six-shooter carved in a rock there. Said it points right down into the center where it would have put anybody in a 100 foot tilt. Now that was that.

(That was what that was.)

If I'd known there was a salt creek over there, I'd suggested let's
