

in the English Channel. Well, of course, he never thought anything about it about giving him that name. So, one of my aunts sit down one time, and told me all about it. She said, "We just kept it in the family." And Ma told me about it, and said--course, Pa died and he had told her all about it--said, "We are Indians, but ain't got no way to prove it, and no way to prove who our great-granddaddy really was." 'Cause he was just a little boy and the rest of the family had died. This white man picked him up somewhere in Arkansas and took him and raised him. So, Haddock isn't his real name at all. But he went by that.

Mr. Thompson: He become part of the family.

(Well, good.)

Of course, the family is so large.

Unidentified voice: My family is quite interesting. The first white man to ever stick a match to a fire in Washington county office. And from that, there is a great portion of Indian in England forrests and in Ireland. (Last sentence not clear)
