

them where, to a place where I like to play and when I had 'em out there why, I would take a bunch of eggs out there and bury 'em in the ground. I had some eggs out there, I didn't eat them I didn't take 'em out there to cook them, but I just took them out there with a pencil I would draw some faces on the eggs like, you've seen Humpty Dumpty, picture on the egg or easter eggs how they mark 'em, well I just made faces on there and men and women like, you know. I'd just play with 'em out there and when I got ready to come back, drive cattle back home into the corral I would just put them eggs away. Dug a hole in the ground and I'd put 'em all in there and then come on home. I used to do things like that, kept things out in the woods to play with at first one place and another. I had to have different things there or some other things over at another place and so on and one time I was tickled me, you know to thing about it, them cattle they sure like to get over that fence and get into somebody else's greener pastures over there I guess or somebody else's cornfield, that's where they don't want them cattle or nothing in there. Lot of times I'd be playing sitting there and then look up and see them cattle all ready in somebody else's cornfield over there. And I'd jump up and get on the horse go over there and round 'em and drive them back into my pasture and I'd have a time, sometime them old cows would hesitate they wouldn't, they'd scatter out, run from me, you know, and I'd have a time chasing 'em, rounding 'em up. One time I was trying to get my horse to go and get started right away he wouldn't do it, boy, I was just trying to make him move and them cattle just kept going, and eating, and like they was jsut dying, eating, eating just going on and on till they got into srubbery like, you know, and they was just, boy as they were going though there boy I think they got in a bumblebee nest. I seen them bumblebees just swarming all over them cattle, boy them cows just started running with their tails up. Boy they took off and I knew what happened so I tried to make my horse run the other way too, take get out of there. He wouldn't hurry so I just jumped off and ducked through that fence when I was crawling through that fence why one of 'em hit me right
