

(Yeah.)

And during the Civil War.

(Well, I think it would be well to record the names of those old home places, house places, who lives there.)

Now right over there by that Squirrel-Adair cemetery now they'd another one there. And old house place. Its as far back as I can remember it, was an old house place 'cause we used to find coins there, quarters and half dollars. You know, a fella find'em now they'd be worth fortunes.

(Why sure they would.)

I know I find a quarter there about oh I'd say sixty years ago. And it's old then. Its all kinda' cleared over now though. And I'll tell you another one that I want us to go to. There's two graveyards. The road is dividing them. We'll have to walk a good way.

(Yes.)

One of 'em is, let's see. White and Adair. On the other side of the road its Pratt and Squirrel. That's over there close to, you know

(Irrelevant conversation) We might come back around that way. Its not too far out of your way. Next time we'll go over there. Dick Pratt said he'd go with us. As far as I know there back there:

(Were the people and the (not clear) down in here, Jeff?)

- Yeah, yeah. This was the old original home of the Nighthawks. Right in this Flint District.

(Yeah.)

That was the territorial line right there, you know.

(Yeah.)

You know, Flint was on that side and this was Goingsnake. Right in here up and down this creek is where them old timers, old Nighthawks, lived.

(Yeah.)
