

That's where Dick lived. Old man Dick. They'd been drinking and this old man Jack Wolf and Dick. I don't think old man Jack was bad to drink, but this Dick was. And they were all drinking with these other Wolfs and they beat him up, this Dick Wolf, Wiley's brother. They beat him up. They'd missed him. They thought he ought to be at home; you know. And the old man, old man Jack, Wiley's daddy went to looking for him. Went--come right down that road like we went in there. And they was way-laying him down there. Just about sun-up. One of 'em shot him with a shotgun and the other one shot him a Winchester. One of 'em shot him in the hip and the other one in the stomach.

(Well.)

Shot him twice.

(Well. And he was an old man then.)

Yeah, he was an old man then 'cause Wiley remembered it. He lived two days, but he died. And Lincoln Wolf and Jim Wolf was the ones that kill him.

(Interruption)

--Smith killed Lincoln Wolfe. They had election way back after statehood, you know. Some kind of election and he got on a big drunk. Couldn't nobody do anything with him. And Dan Smith was deputy marshall and Dan killed him.

(Well.)

Dan Hummingbird was his uncle, you know.

(That was George Hummingbird's uncle?)

Yeah.

(Yeah.)

He was one of the U. S. Marshalls that was Indian at that time. Yeah, George told me about a lot of times.

(Well, that must have really been something.)