Two copies of the typescripts have been prepared, partly as an insurance measure against the loss or theft of any portion of the collec-The original typed copies will be bound in book form, the volumes tion. being organized by tribe and within a volume alphabetically by the last names of informants. Individual volumes will contain from 240 to 260 pages, and for some tribes there may be several volumes whereas some volumes may contain materials from two or more tribes. There will be almost sixty volumes of bound typescripts, plus an index volume. Each individual volume will have its own table of contents listing the informants whose testimony is contained therein, and the appropriate typescript numbers, and there will be cross-referencing of materials which derive from more than one tribal category. For example, there is one interview where three informants all took part -- two Kidwa-Apache women and one Comanche women. This typescript will be bound with the Kiowa-Apache volume, but cross-referenced in the table of contents of the Comanche volume. The carbon copies of the typescripts will be organized the same way, but left unbound and filed in pamphlet boxes, along with the miscellaneous materials such as field notes. These carbon copies of the typescripts may be more convenient for xeroxing than the bound originals. The tapes themselves will also be stored in special filing cabinets in some part of the Western History Collections. It would seem desirable to make a storage copy of all the tape recorded materials--using at least two and perhaps four tracks at 15/16 inches per second on high quality reel-to-reel tapes -. for the long-range storage qualities of the cassette tapes are not yet known. However such copying would be expensive and time-consuming and
