

were better years but they're gone now and they'll never come back again. He said there were better days than today. He talked quite a bit about the horses that he used to have. He used to help chase wild horses, and put them up in corrals. At his age, he's about seventy-eight years old, sometimes he forgets his birthdays and things like that but I think I covered about everything he talked about. And some things he repeated them over so I just took out the things the main ones he talked about. I didn't put all the things that he repeated, the same ones over. So this is how I interviewed John Scott. He lives in Eufaula, Oklahoma. He's almost blind, had an eye operation and he's kind of hard of hearing but he done real well.
