

it out, just like anything you dry. So I guess she dry it out. And that heart, she cured it out, too, dry it. And finally they get it all cured out and dry. Same with that butterfly. Heart of snapping turtle. You know they hard to die, them snapping turtles. So, she get that thing like that, dry it up. They crumble it up with that butterfly. And they got, I don't know what all she mixed with it. So when anybody get sick, or anything like that, with heart, you know they use it thataway. You don't give it, you just take a whiff of it now and then, just like that and they get cured over it. It sure funny how it works. But it's good. That's what Johnson said, the other day, he said, somebody get me two snapping turtles. You have to take two, two hearts, have to have plenty. So I got that big butterfly, I talking about. He say you see one of them, catch it and kill it. You always put it thorough a toothpick, or something. Cure it out that way. So he say happen to see one, catch and do that and save it for me. When I get some of that turtle heart, I'll go ahead and fix it.

(Can Johnson make that medicine?)

Yea, he knows how. Yea, he mixes it. So, He told me the other day about it. He ask me how I feel, I say well I feel pretty good. He always told me always take care of myself. Don't try to do anything hard work round. I ain't been doing nothing.

FAMOUS APACHE DOCTORS:

(Fred, who do you think were some of the best Apache doctors in the old days?)

Way back. Well, there's a few of them Apaches that I know of. They was Old man Saddleblanket, they claim. What I heard, I didn't see him. They claim he was pretty good. Good Indian doctor.
