

(What were all those boys names now? The only one I remember, I seen here a few years ago was Lewis Riddle. Was there a Lewis Riddle?)

Oh, yeah. Yeah but Lewis passed away. He lived over there by-- (Claremore, wasn't it?)

Claremore, yeah. He had a little place over there. They busted Lewis way back in the early, when he was only, oh, a young man, about twenty-two or three years old. Now, he was running cattle up at Four Acre and he borrowed a lot of money. And the banks closed him out. And took everything he had, I guess his headright too. I mean, all his surplus and his land and everything like that. Well, they closed him out, the bank did. He lost everything he had. All except his headright. (Yeah. I guess he was getting along alright. Yeah, he said he bought some (words not clear), you know, cattle--brought them up from Texas, you know.)

Yeah.

(I think, he had maybe a section or half section land over there when he died.)

Well, he probably had some land leased, too, beside what he wanted. I never did get to see Lewis after they closed him out up there at Four Acres. I never got to see him anymore. I don't know. I went to work in the oil fields, see. And I just-- (He was kind of a big fellow, wasn't he?)

Yeah, he was pretty good size. He was built up about like your dad was. About his size, about same size. Yeah. And Lewis, I cut the piece out of the paper when he passed away. And I cut that out and I still got it in my Bible. It said he was an All Around Cowboy, at one time he was All Around Cowboy. And I guess,
