

Yeah, John's still living. He lives down here at Cleveland. They got a nice place out there, right by the lake there by Cleveland and them. He did buy, he bought down there at Halifax. Went down there. I think they had about forty acres in there. (John House.)

John House. Yeah. Now, I understand he moved up to Cleveland. He was talking to somebody down there that knowed me. And he asked about me. Told me to come see him and all like that.

(Yeah, I imagine he's kind of--he was half brother. He must have been part Osage, too. Isn't he?)

No. Huh-uh. No. You see, Jack after, these boys they took their Indian, these Riddle boys, Sherman, Joe and them, they took their Indian from their mother, you see. Their mother was Indian. And so, then after she, well, she didn't pass away, they separated her and Jack separated. And Jack he married Johnny House's mother.

(That's how it is.)

Yeah. So that just made them, I guess, step-brothers.

(Yeah. Half-brothers.)

Step-brothers because his name's House, you see. He wasn't old man Jack's boy because his name House. She had John and Pearl, a boy and a girl when she married Jack. And they just step-brothers. That's what that is instead of half-brothers. But they had a half-brother. Now, Jack, you know Jack here in town, Jack Riddle. He's a painter, you remember. You know, he lives right back over here.

(Where about does he live at? Is he still living now?)

Oh, yeah. He's still, he's not as old as I am. He lives, let's see, you know where, oh, Oscar Whitewing where his mother lived. Down on the corner from the Tastee Freeze.

(From the Lloyd's Thrift Mart?)

Yeah.

(Right across there?)

Yeah. Well, right north on the corner, there. That's where she lived.

(Yeah. I can't never think of her name.)

(Katie.)

Yeah. Katie Lee.
