

Right. Yeah. And they grated a lot of it by hand. They made bread. Stuff like that. Course, then there was lots of wild game, you know. They done lot of hunting, Leonard, in them days. They got lot of their meat, they killed lot of their meat that way, you know. And the Indians, the old men they would go out, hunt about ever day you know. And that's about all they done was hunt. Now Martha told me about place over in there by old John Harlow in there some where. They used to camp hunt in there, a lot you know. Pretty brushy in there. And they used to camp in there and hunt a lot. That's what she told me one day. We was out that way. And if I'm not mistaken, I'm pretty sure there's a piece of ground there that belongs to Martha. And these kids, I don't think, know anything about it. Now, they may have told them at the agency. But I talked to Mary Martha and I told her about it. And I said, "I'm pretty sure, I'm not sure now, but I'm pretty sure." "Martha told me she had some ground out there but I forget how much it was, in there." And I asked Mary Martha if she knew anything about it. Said, "No." "I don't know nothing about it." I said, "That's what your grandma told me." And they used to hunt in there, early day, way back. Used to camp off, like that and hunt.

(They all gathered right there and hunt, I guess. Take it back home, I guess.)

Yeah, then they'd stay out there until they got a big supply and go home. See, back over to camp over there. And that's about all they done then was hunt, back there. And course they never done no farming, theirselves, much. They might raise little corn, something like that. A garden and something like, you know. But they did get a lot of that stuff from the white people, you know. And then they'd take that corr. and grid it up you know. Make meal and break out of it see. Or however they done it. And yeah there was a lot of game in them days. Boy, I mean, there was lots of stuff, here. Now, old Stout, he had the woods full of Indian, right. When we lived over there on his place. And you know, these hustlers come in, they come in here. And they'd settle in here, you know. And after they finally kept getting them ponies, driving them off. Finally, wasn't hardly any of them. Boy, them Indian pones they were tough, boy, I mean they was
