

SADDENED ABOUT LACK OF RESPECT FOR OLD CEMETERIES

Yes, right away from--highway. I know then we found this cemetery down there, you know.

(That's right.)

I know--'course my brother he's gone now. He passed away some years back. He saw that highway over there they put in that-- He was hoping that he'd come across to his place. (Static) -- They're making this road. They're cutting a new highway. I guess they've had some--being down there. They went down (words not clear). And he said they brought up things that the Delaware done. He said that anyway. They went to work and they moved it. And he said it was on a little prairie-like.

(Well.)

But he said otherwise they would have never knowed they were there.

(Oh, there's lots things in through the country are placed that way. And no one knew a thing about 'em.)

Third voice: (Sentence not clear.)

No, no one ever cleaned it up and things.

(That's right.)

But no one was interested and I just happened along and found this one to take interest and want to take care of things. Lot of those people, you know, aren't here anymore either, you know.

(That's right.)

Third voice: I have a feeling that people before we--people was drunk or something. If they lost (not clear). Go in there and tear 'em down.

(Why sure. Oh yes. I've heard of that happening too. And I know of places. And even in this late day and age I have knowledge of where they've used a nice monument to build side walks or doorsteps. And that's happening right today. It's hard to believe, but it actually happened.)
