

Well they told us, 'Course Dad's dead, you know. 'Course, you can't tell my father nothing. (Sentence not clear) younger, sister.

GRAVE DIGGING SOUNDS HORRIBLE

I heard there was a grave digging going on down there towards (words not clear).

You know I don't know about this (words not clear) so I just made a point that I just better now (words not clear) anymore.

(No, I couldn't stand that.)

One sure thing they better stay away from my people. Better just not let that happen to any my people. And so I never heard anymore about it. But there's an old fella and was telling me that that's what they were doing. And then said how come him to know he said there a light down there. Light like a lantern. And he said he got kinda to watching. Then he said, that's what's been going on down there. But that was years ago. He said they must been looking for treasure.

(Well, that's a poor place to look for it.)

Well, you know, they often claim, you know, the Indians if they have any wealth they just put it away with 'em, you know.

(That I never could believe because very few of 'em had anything to--)

That's right.

Third voice: (Sentence not clear.)

(That's right. They were--most Indians were having a hard time just getting by without accumulating any treasure of any kind.)

Indians was my mother's best friends. And she was white around here.

(Did the Indians have a central meeting grounds up in this part of the country in the early days?)

I don't know.

(Other than the one up--well it could be in--on Caney Creek or Caney river.
