

countries." I told him, "So I can see other people." And he says, "Why?" I said, "Just cause." I said, "I just wanna see some other people." And he said, he said, "Well, why not go to Chilocco or else Lawrence, Kansas." I said, "Well, I might go to Chilocco." I told him cause, you know, Chilocco and Oklahoma was mixing up then. You know, there was from Cherokee, North Carolina was there and Mexicans.

('Bout, what year was this, Dolly?)

That was in 1915.

(Oh 1915, Oklahoma had already become a state, hadn't it? 1907.)

It was long time, long time, cause Oklahoma come in state in 1903.

(In 1903.)

And so, he said, "Well," he said, "you wanna go Chilocco?" I said, "Yes, I'll go to Chilocco," I told him. He said, "You won't want to come back?" I said, "No, what's here?" And he said, "Well, that's one time we settle it for good." (Laughter) And I said, "Well," I said, "Yeah."

Unidentified voice: Look at this doll. Ain't that cute.

He said, "Alright," he said, "You tell Uncle Joe wants take you to Hulbert in the morning tomorrow or Saturday," you know. And he said, "You tell him to take you to Hulbert in the morning, and I'll be there waiting for you." And he said, "I'll give you a ticket at Hulbert to the depot." He said, "You can go get your application at the Indian Agency." I told him, "Alright," and sure enough if I did. I went to Muskogee--went and got my application, I went and got my application, and I got Dr. Burns. You remember him? Got him to examine me. But I come back that evening before dawn, and --

(Did you have to take the bus to Muskogee or the train?)

Train, train.
