

(Oh, he must have worked at Chilocco a long time, then.)

Yeah, he did.

(Is he still living now?)

Yes, he's living, ain't he?

Unidentified voice: Uh-huh.

Ain't he? (Laughter)

Unidentified voice: Yeah. They stopped down the house not long ago (not clear). That's what somebody told me. You know, I thought I was going to get to see him when Duce died.

Yeah, I went down there when--well, I come down there to the funeral.

I went down there. I went with Charlie, and, so, I never seen --

Unidentified voice: I didn't even see her either. There were so many people, you know.

Unidentified voice: And it's late. It's late. It was getting dark, wasn't it?

Unidentified voice: Uh-huh, oh, he died Wednesday, and he was sure somebody wasn't he?

Unidentified voice: That was her brother, you see, ain't it?

Unidentified voice: Uh-hmmm, yeah.

(I was there.)

Was you there? Well, I was there. I come in, you know, when --

(I didn't go to the cemetery, but I was at the funeral at Tahlequah.)

Well, I was the first one went there, you know, went through there. Of course, they read--pushed me through first, you know. And I stood there and talked to old Duce, you know. I do that every time.

(When somebody dies?)

Yean.

(You tell them "good-by.")

I tell them good-by. I just told Duce, I said, "Well, good-by, Duce," I said,
