

the inauguration of President Johnson. And we went to Washington and we attended all the banquets and the sights and he was more than willing then to help us in any way that we needed when we were in Washington. And we viewed the inaugural parade and we attended the banquet that night and at that time, we enjoyed ourself immensely during those few days, associating with him. He took us around the sights of Washington and just one of the things I would like to say about the Chief. And another memorable occasion that I had occasion to accompany to him--one time at the President at the Phillips Corporation, invited the Chief and his guests to be--their guests at the Mr. Adams' 66th birthday. So we--Mr. Pitts wanted me to get someone to prepare a scroll from the Osage Tribe to present to the (static on tape)--So, Mr. Pitts asked me to find someone to prepare this scroll that we might present it to Mr. Adams at his birthday. So I went to Tulsa, Oklahoma to an old friend of mine, a wellknown artist by the name of Mr. Brummett Echo Hawk. And I told Mr. Echo Hawk what we wanted and he was more than glad to prepare this scroll for us. Of course, that was some time, a month or so, preceeding the big occasion. It came around, the day came up and on that date, Mr. Echo Hawk came over to my home and we proceeded to Bartlesville where the celebration was to be held. And it so happened that that day we were greeted as we went into Bartlesville with a thunderstorm. And Mr. Pitts had asked me if I could secure some war bonnets for--to decorate the Osage float. And I got the war bonnets, but we were not able to use them at that time. And anyway, we had a float during the lull of the storm, the parade was held, and after the parade I had a few people that was on the float--the Osage float who were the guest of Mr. Pitts. And at that time they were going
