

they just bare-back. And they have ropes for bridles. Have the ropes around here in the mouth of horses. So they all took out. There's a big group southwest and they said go just as far as you can....far as you can. These other peoples he said, "Now you all go west...right straight west up this way." And some of them go way down northwest. And then some of them..."When you all come to big mountains, just go to the other side of the mountains. If you all could get over it." And so these groups of them, they all scattered. And some of these Indians they didn't go. They told them to go east. Some of them said, "We going to go east," and the chief he said, "No. Don't go that way, that's white people's land. They up that way when you get over there, they going to kill you all. You all just go west....west...way back there. And when you all hit the river just live there." That's what he said. And these other folks they went southwest and northwest... they all scattered and they went like that. Those ones that didn't believe him, they all died. Their bodies was just everywhere... laying everywhere. So when they got over there, they live way up in the mountains somewhere. And this man, he took his family and he took off. They went north...just as far as they could go. When they got over there, they came to a big river, you know, and they couldn't cross it so they just land there. Just stayed there. And after that...and all the ones that left there, they all right. They didn't die, but all the ones that stay there, they all die. And now these...I forgotten what the name of these...way up, just southwest
