

mouth. In them days, they don't want us to put lipstick on our mouth. They don't want us to use that rouge on our mouth. That paint...what they paint the girls, their daughter's with. They don't want us to even put it on our mouth. They said if you put it on your mouth...they said, that's the meaning of you going to get sick or...I forgot now what they said, get sick or you be eating something that's got blood in it. Not cooked: But the Indians do. They eat raw liver and raw kidneys. They eat it raw. They said, it builds their blood up. Up till today, my age, they still eat kidneys raw and they eat it raw you know. That was the old people tell to eat it. But these younger generations, shit, they don't like it. I always like to let my little boy eat a piece of liver and he wouldn't do it. Put it in his mouth and he chew it and spit it out.

(How long did the girls a long time ago like to wear their hair?)
Like her...just loose like her hair.

(Did they decorate it anyway?)

No. Oh, they have that red paint what I'm talking about. They, in the part of their hair just like me where it's parted, they painted it red...they paint it red. They paint red around their eyes. And then they put this paint all over their face. And the old peoples, they paint their faces all the time...everyday. In the mornings they comb their hair and put that red outfit right on the part of their hair. And then they put this rouge all over their face, everyday, they do that....everyday they wear it like that. Over their face,

(What about the men, did they.....?)
