

I don't know how she---she punch holes in it with this---well, anyway, this trees got big stickers on it..thorns like. She made holes in that buckskin and she soften up and (?) that hide on it and she put that hide with the fur out. She turn it over and make a dress out of it. She made a cap out of it, she made a shoe out of it. She took that buckskin and she sewed with that buckskin. She didn't have no needle but she had that buckskin and she sewed with that buckskin. She didn't have no needle but she had that big thorn. What she got out of that tree. She made mocassins. She made boot that comes way up here to her knees. And then finally she took out. And when she was going, this three little bears they follow her long ways and they cried and they follow her long ways and she told the, "Go on back." She would talk to them in Indian and they would understand...understand her. And then they fall over and get mad and roll over. They want to be going with her. But she got a stick and she hit them and they went back to that mountain. She took out. She went long, long ways and then she got tired, and it was night time, and there was lot of tall grass, you know way above her. And she come to that place and there was water running...and she come to that place and there was water running.....and she come to that bank and there she tied that grass together with that buckskin string she had... she made rope out of it....buckskin and deer hide. What the bears would come in with that deer. She took all that hide off and she tied that grass up and she tied it like a tip. And she sleep in there. And this coyote....way in the night...and she's so tired she took her mocassins off and layed them by her. This coyote came and come in where she was laying and that coyote just start licking her feet. And this coyote spit on her feet and just lick it like that with its tongue and afterwhile she went off to sleep. This coyote he hollered---hollering around her.
