

Alice: Would you like for me to read his letter to you? We got it this morning.

(Yeah, I would.)

Alice: It is a good letter, and he is a smart man.

(The thing about it, just you, like we said, we thought John was telling me that Greg thought about their wanting to honor Paul by leaving his name on the ballot, and they want to try to get him on, and like the paper said, they would have either have the people appoint one or have a referendum. I said, "Well, you might get a few people to go along with you." As far as us, our ways, you know, the fellow is gone and that's it.)

Alice: And you're not letting them rest.

(Like you say, they used him for 20 years. If they still want to use him,---)

Alice: It's a sad thing. It really is. I want to tell you another thing. Do you have the thing on? I am not particular 'bout this; and like I say, they do say that I do influence this or that. I think that anybody that is married to a man regardless of what tribe they would be whether they be White person or not; if you work to help a person and work with that aim, I think that you're just as much entitled to say something when it's your income. Like I told Vess, we work together. What is his is mine. We don't have a lot of money. We earn what we have. That cook book really helps out, I tell you for sure, because I sell it all over the world. Right now, I don't have a book, and I'm getting orders from right and left because too many people want 'em. I've got letters asking me to send 'em the price of
