Indians knew how to do things and knew signs of most everything. Me and Lizzie was talking about it yesterday. In winter time if there is a ring around the moon, we'd have real bad weather. We talked about how the Indians use to do things for themselves. But now every thing is different. I can name the twelve months in year in Indian. I guess it's Creek and Seminole. My husband used to tell me about Honey Springs battle. It's close to Oktaha, Oklahoma. I don't remember it though. I've forgotten lots of things he told me.

MORE ABOUT FOOD

(The small grits I was talking about, while ago I didn't finish telling it)-- They can make sofky out of it. I never did go to stomp dance but my sisters used to go and the Indians used to fix big dinner and used the corn in lots of ways. They would have squirrel soup. "Sockomiphee" (?). Sometimes they brought some back to us, and it's really good. And most Indians make "white abusky." You pour water in it after it's fix and it's kinda white looking and then you sweeten it. I get my corn from brother's, (He lives in Hanna.) His wife is a white woman but she sure can cook Indian cooking. She knows how to name things too.

(This is all. She can speak in English but she said she had rather talk her language. She lives near Eufaula Indian Boarding School. She said she was born on Saturday and that's the reason that she is still fine and she is still able to clean the big back yard. She said she has worked pretty hard all her life. She told me she just go through raking her big, shady back yard. She lost a son in War II in Japan, during the Invasion.
