

Anybody can tell you, I don't know /static/ --down at Muldrow. Somewhere I don't know just exactly where, that this Sequoyah...well, they had the gin and Sequoyah, I think they had a trading post or something.

(Must have had.)

Down there. That's where Sequoyah went a lot. I was trying to think who might could give you information. Oh, Dan Sharver. I'm almost sure that Dan Sharver could--Dan Sharver. He's an old timer. He might be able to give you some... Not far from, well, Mrs. Pierce could tell you where it's at. You know where they manufactured salt.

(Yeah, Sequoyah, I remember-- He did have a salt works somewhere.)

It's not far from Sequoyah's home. I don't know the location of it now because--this Cy Pierce could tell you. Just like I said. I know of, but these old timers can really tell you.

SALT SPRINGS - PEOPLE IN THE AREA

(Is that salt spring still in existence or does anyone know?)

Yes. I think it's still in existence. I believe now. Let me see if I've got a picture. I believe I still got...And this Mr. Pierce knows where it is. I don't. Now, isn't that something? I've lived all my life...I said there's a lot around here. No, it's not here.

(Well, the salt springs from which Sequoyah got water to make salt. Located a mile and a half west of Nicut.)

/sentence not clear./

(After Sequoyah's death, local residences took the kettle to this place and manufactured their own supply of salt.)

...in fact, my dad...I remember him.

(Yeah.)

Going up ther and making salt. She was, in fact, they were all born in this Sequoyah's home.

(Well.)

I mean in the old home place.
