(Hard language)

Yeah, it's kind of long.

INDIAN POTATOES

(Well, how about the Indian potatoes? Could you tell me about those?)

Well, the Indian potatoes, you go after them around March, way up to 'bout the last part of this month. And you have to find potatoes, and you have to dig. They hard to find. They grow where it's wet too. And they what-call-it-----have to dig around for them. And you have to work hard when you get them, and when you get 'em home you have to kinda scrape 'em, clean 'em. Just like everything else, you clean 'em, and you scrape 'em good, and they're ready to cook.

(Are they pretty good?)

Oh yeah, they good, you have to cook it with the meat.

(You know you said they are hard to find. Well, when you go out looking for them, what do you look for?)

Theres a vine. There's kind of a white vines and you can see them, on the weeds and the vines are kind of light-looking.

(What kind fo country do they grow in? Down in the woods?)

No, down in a ditch place. You know where they're kinda water like.

That's where they grow. Same with the onions.

(When you get them, do you go by yourself, or does somebody go with you?)

Somebody go along, I never go by myself. You don't go near, you have to go kinda way off.

(Did you have these Indians potatoes when you were little?)

They had it long time, I hear them talk about it a long time. They had 'em
