

(So they went to Texas, into Oklahoma and then into Arkansas?)

Uhuh. Well, that certain bunch did.

(Which bunch was that?)

I told you it was the Kaimachi bunch.

(Yeah, the Kaimachi, and then what happened to the other bunch after the Kaimachi bunch?)

Well, they were the ones that went to Texas, I mean went into Kansas. Right around Winfield.

(Were those all of the rest of the Caddo besides the Kaimachi?)

Yes, there were several bands, there were seven distinctive bands.-- That went there. But as I said, on their return back to Oklahoma, that's when the spinal meningitis hit them.

CADDO SCOUTS AND THEIR ROLE IN THE CAVALRY DURING SURRENDER OF KIOWA AND COMANCHE:

(Were there women and children that died too then?)

Oh yes, there were actual families. But then, at that time, they had horses from what I understand. But some of them would be riding.

They all just be going down the road with their pack horses and so on.

But they did stop on the way and to bury them, but some of the, they didn't have time to bury them.

(How did the Caddo bury those people?)

Well, they just buried them like they do today.

(Did they ever bury anything with them?)

Well, their special belongings, what they had on them, that's what they buried them with. Cause they left most of their possessions.

hoping that they would go back in time because when they said--they always speak of the time when the shots were fired and such things as that. That's when they really did have trouble I guess. Then when they came this way, that's when the Comanches and the Kiowas you know,
