

years, you know, but he's not a regular. He worked not in a ring, you know professional, but you know, just like saloons, you know, people, well, after they learned that he can hit and all that, they'd bring boxers to that little town they call Ponca. It's still here, I guess. And they used to pick up a fight with him, you know, just to get him to fight them. He'd fight. And he's all right just as long as they don't hurt him, well, he'll fight, you know. But when they hurt him, he makes that growl, you know, bear growl. Just like, growls like a bear and that's the time whenever he hits, you know, they're out. And one time, he had a fight with two of the, two or three men from different towns, you know, cities, quite far away. He knocked one fella in a wall and then he went after him. He was gonna hit him right in the head. Just about the time he got that fist, well, this man fell, and his fist went through the wall. They said they told me that they still have that building there, wall, just to preserve that for that man's hand went through the wall.

(Well, that hole's still there?)

Yeah. (Laughter) Yeah, it hit that man, now what would have happen? Well, that's the kind of power, you know, of the people. That's just one of the incidents, you know, but there's a lot of them like that power. They can fly, and they can run just like a dog or antelope, anything. That's the power they had. And they have this meeting, these that are gifted, they have their meetings. And sometimes, you know, why, anyone would come in. A young man, they told us of a young man came, you know and they had a (Indian word) there. They said, you know, that's a semi-like a fish bone. They say it hurts. They keep that. That shoot that out some way. You don't see it, but they shoot it out against one another, you know. They can take it because they had a power, see. That's one kind of a game they play, these, the people that has that power. The power