

They're just like children, just like kids now. They're supposed to be learned men. And he and Indian not that way, but they respect one another and they love people. They loved one another, see. That's the way it was from the beginning. That's what we been taught from way back there from generation to generation to generation to love each other, to love your fellow man, to love your neighboring your tribe. That's what they used to tell us. When I was a boy, U used to hear that a lot, love one another. (Indian sentence) They used to say. Well, those teachings trying to keep them to this day.

(Yeah, it seems like the old teaching certainly be good use if they were to put them in practice in modern days.)

See, just like we say, we lost that fine art, you know, Indians had love. Course, we love to some extent so we don't go deep enough to love you know. Well, the Indians nowadays, they lost that. Like our old people used to tell us, "Some day, you won't know each other. You're not going to visit one another, and you're not going to notice one another when you meet." That's what they used to tell us, and it's that way, see. It was hardly visit one another, and don't notice each other. See, just these Christian people try to make friends with everybody. That's only ones until they get to know God, and get converted and live a pretty fair Christian life, and you're gonna love one another see that's the way it's going to be. But, now, they lost that all those teachings from the old people. They lost all that.

(Yeah, they worship the Great Spirit, and like you say, they use Him in their everyday life, you know. Wish He come along and help our Indian race, they survived all that.)

Mmmmm-hmmmm.

STORY OF A GIRL WHO SAVED TRIBE FROM STARVATION

(You know, sometimes I guess you got stories too. I guess, when the tribe
